

ART IN MOTION : an animation workshop

Have you ever wanted to add a new dimension to your own art? Or sought to bring an exciting multi-disciplinary art form into your classroom? Art in Motion is a great workshop presented by Digital Arts Film & Television designed to provide an intensive hands-on experience in animation for classroom teachers and other interested adults. The instructors have many years of classroom and professional experience in animation and promise a week full of learning and fun.

John Prusak is an award-winning cinematographer and media artist who has taught video and animation for over 30 years. John currently teaches at Wayne State University.

Annette Alexander-Frank is an award-winning art teacher and arts advocate who has coordinated media workshops for students and teachers for 25 years.

WHAT IT'S ABOUT:

This course will provide an opportunity to try a variety of different kinds of animation including cell, cut-outs, drawing under the camera, object animation, pixilation and claymation. Other aspects of animation production such as storyboarding, editing, adding sound, and (for teachers) classroom applications will be covered according to group interest.

WHEN and WHERE:

Art in Motion will meet August 3 to 7, 2009. Classes meet daily Monday through Thursday from 9am to 5pm and Friday until 1 pm at the beautiful Howell Nature Center, an educational facility between Lansing and Detroit.

FEES:

The tuition for Art in Motion is $600, which includes most materials, lunch, and a compilation DVD of all work produced. University credit (3 hours) is offered through Central Michigan University for an additional fee paid to CMU. Overnight accommodations in dorms are available for an additional $100, which includes breakfast.
